Bobo was a little crocodile with an artist's heart. Unlike other crocodiles, he loved collecting colorful things and drawing pictures on stones and pieces of paper he found.

Seeing Bobo's growing love for painting, Mama decided it was time for him to learn from the wise old fox.

Everyone in the forest knew the wise old fox and his special school. Animals came to him to learn all sorts of things. And Bobo? He couldn't wait to begin his painting lessons!

Bobo couldn't wait to show Mama the beautiful paintings he had made at school. But there was one big problem—his home was underwater! Splash! His precious paintings got wet!

"Papa!" Bobo cried sadly. "Every time I bring a painting home from school, the water washes away all its lovely colors! Oh, no! All my hard work is ruined!"

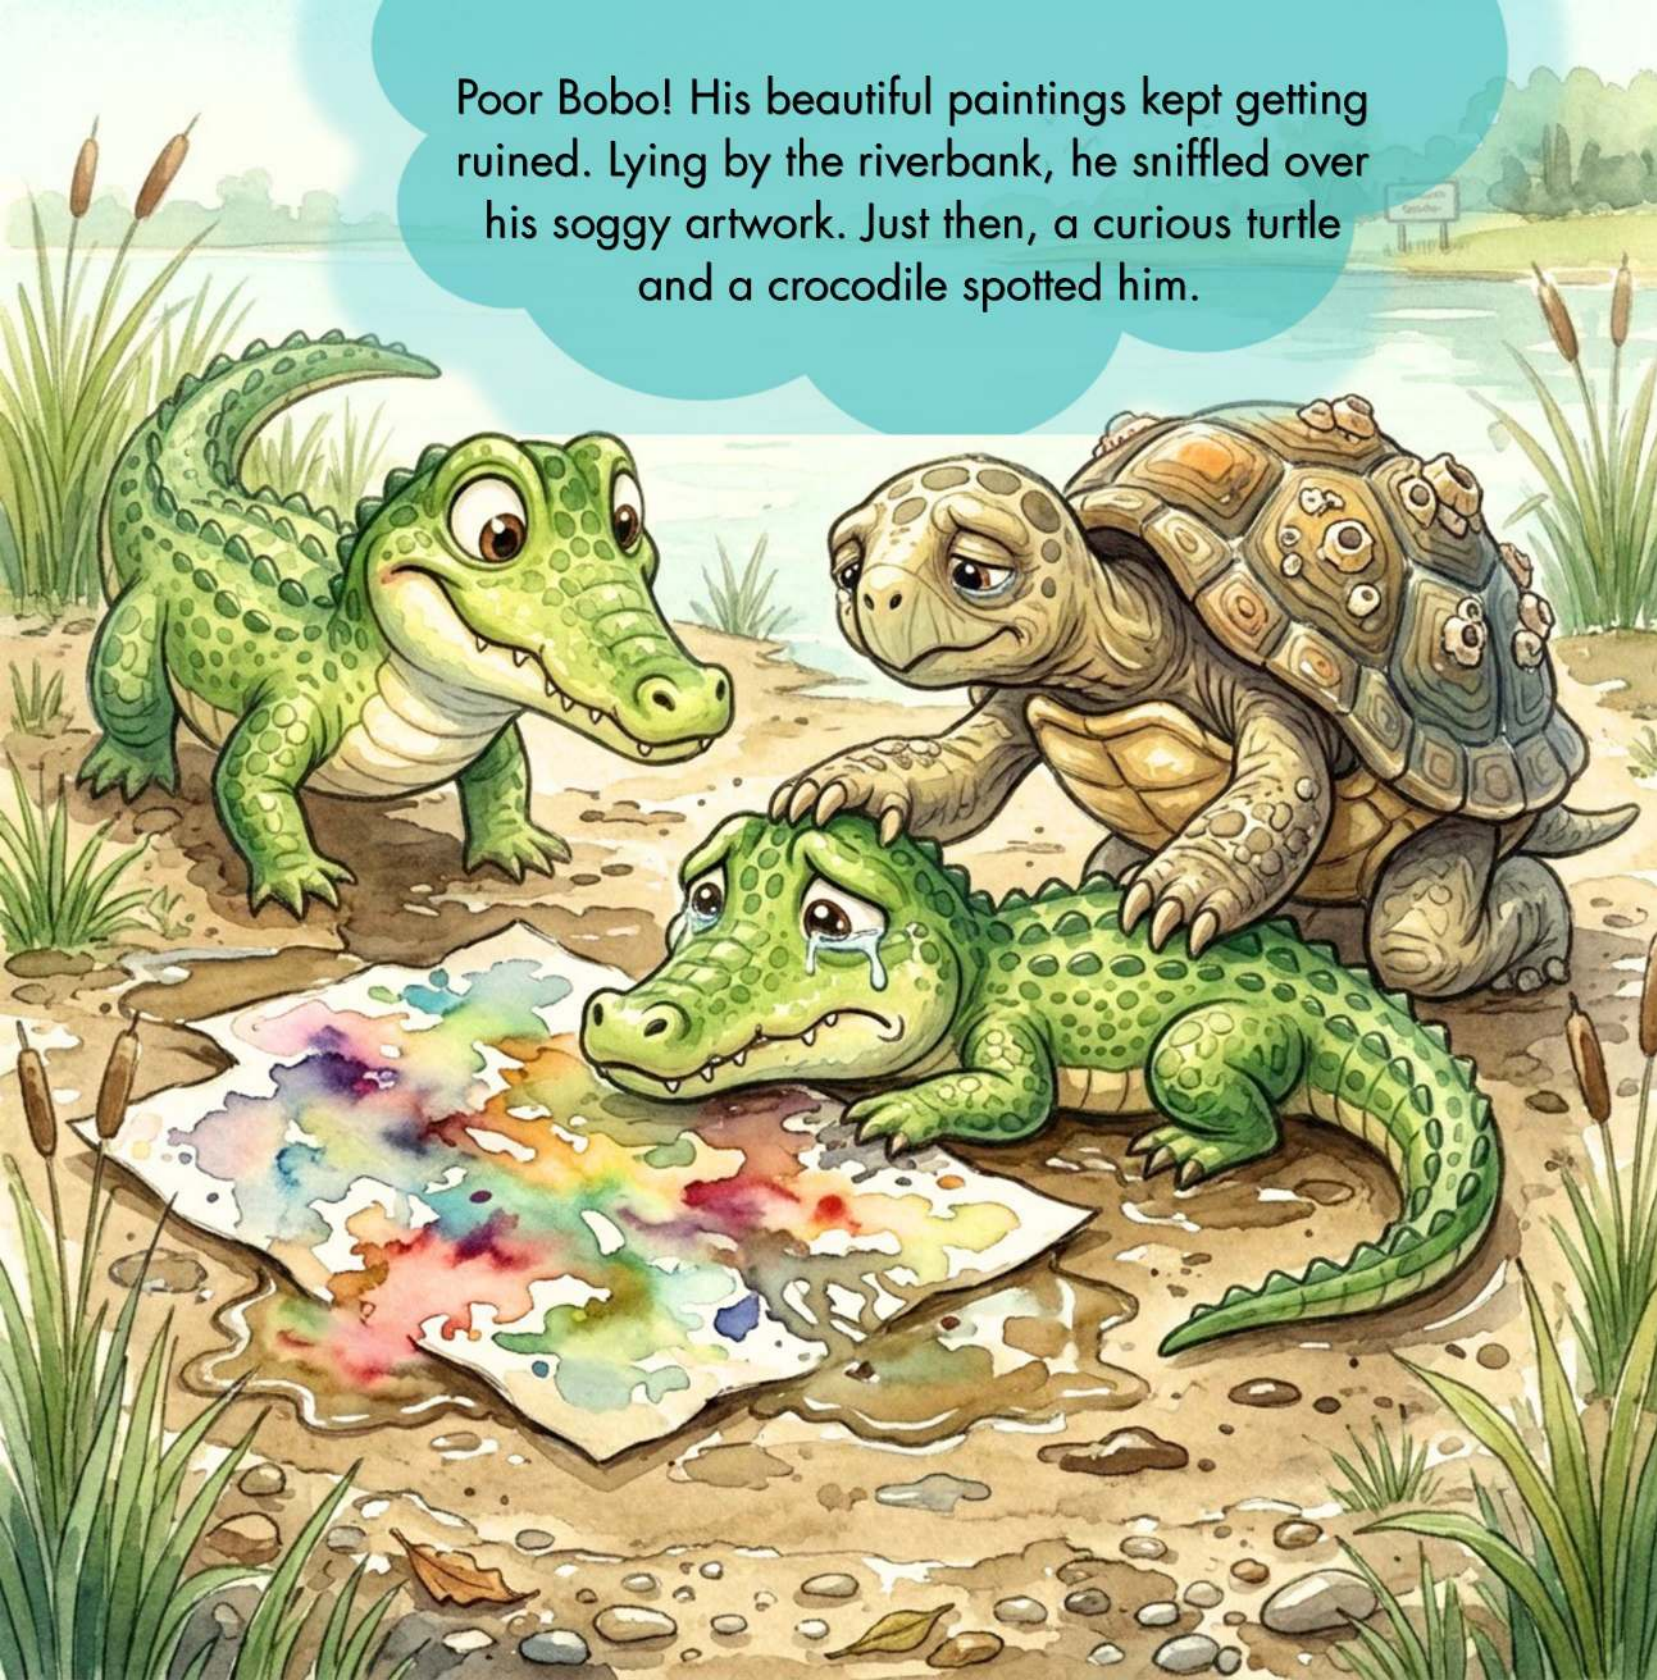

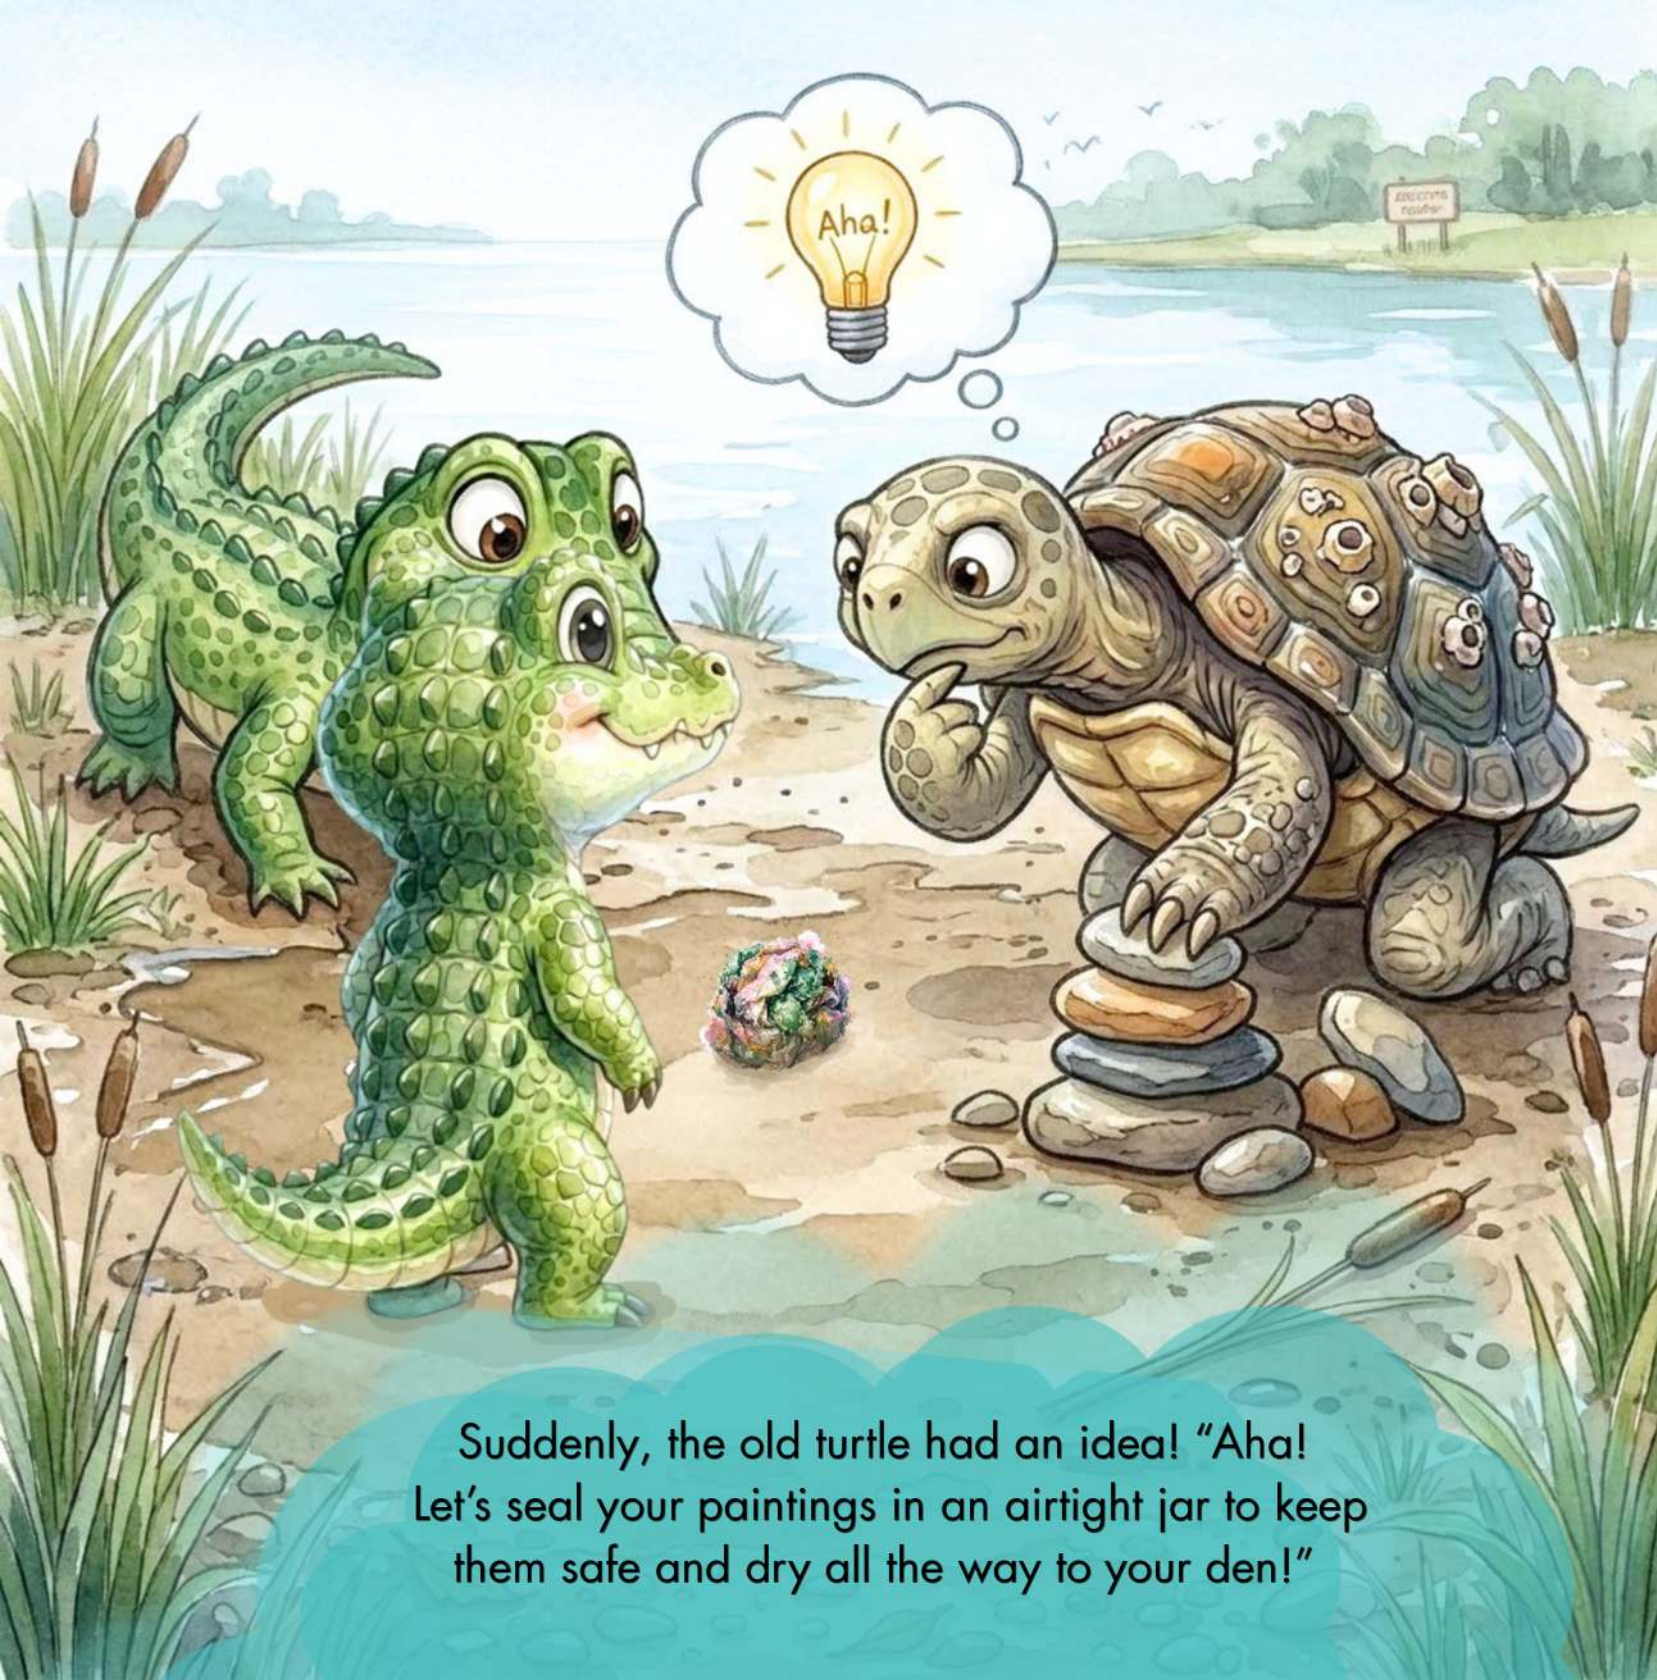

Suddenly, Bobo and Papa had an idea! They found a big, empty seashell and carefully tucked Bobo's paintings inside. "This should keep them safe!" Papa said. Excitedly, Bobo carried the shell toward their underwater den. But would their clever idea work?

After the failed attempt Bobo wrapped his paintings in big leaves. “Safe and secure!” he cheered.

But alas! Nothing seemed to work.
Poor Bobo!

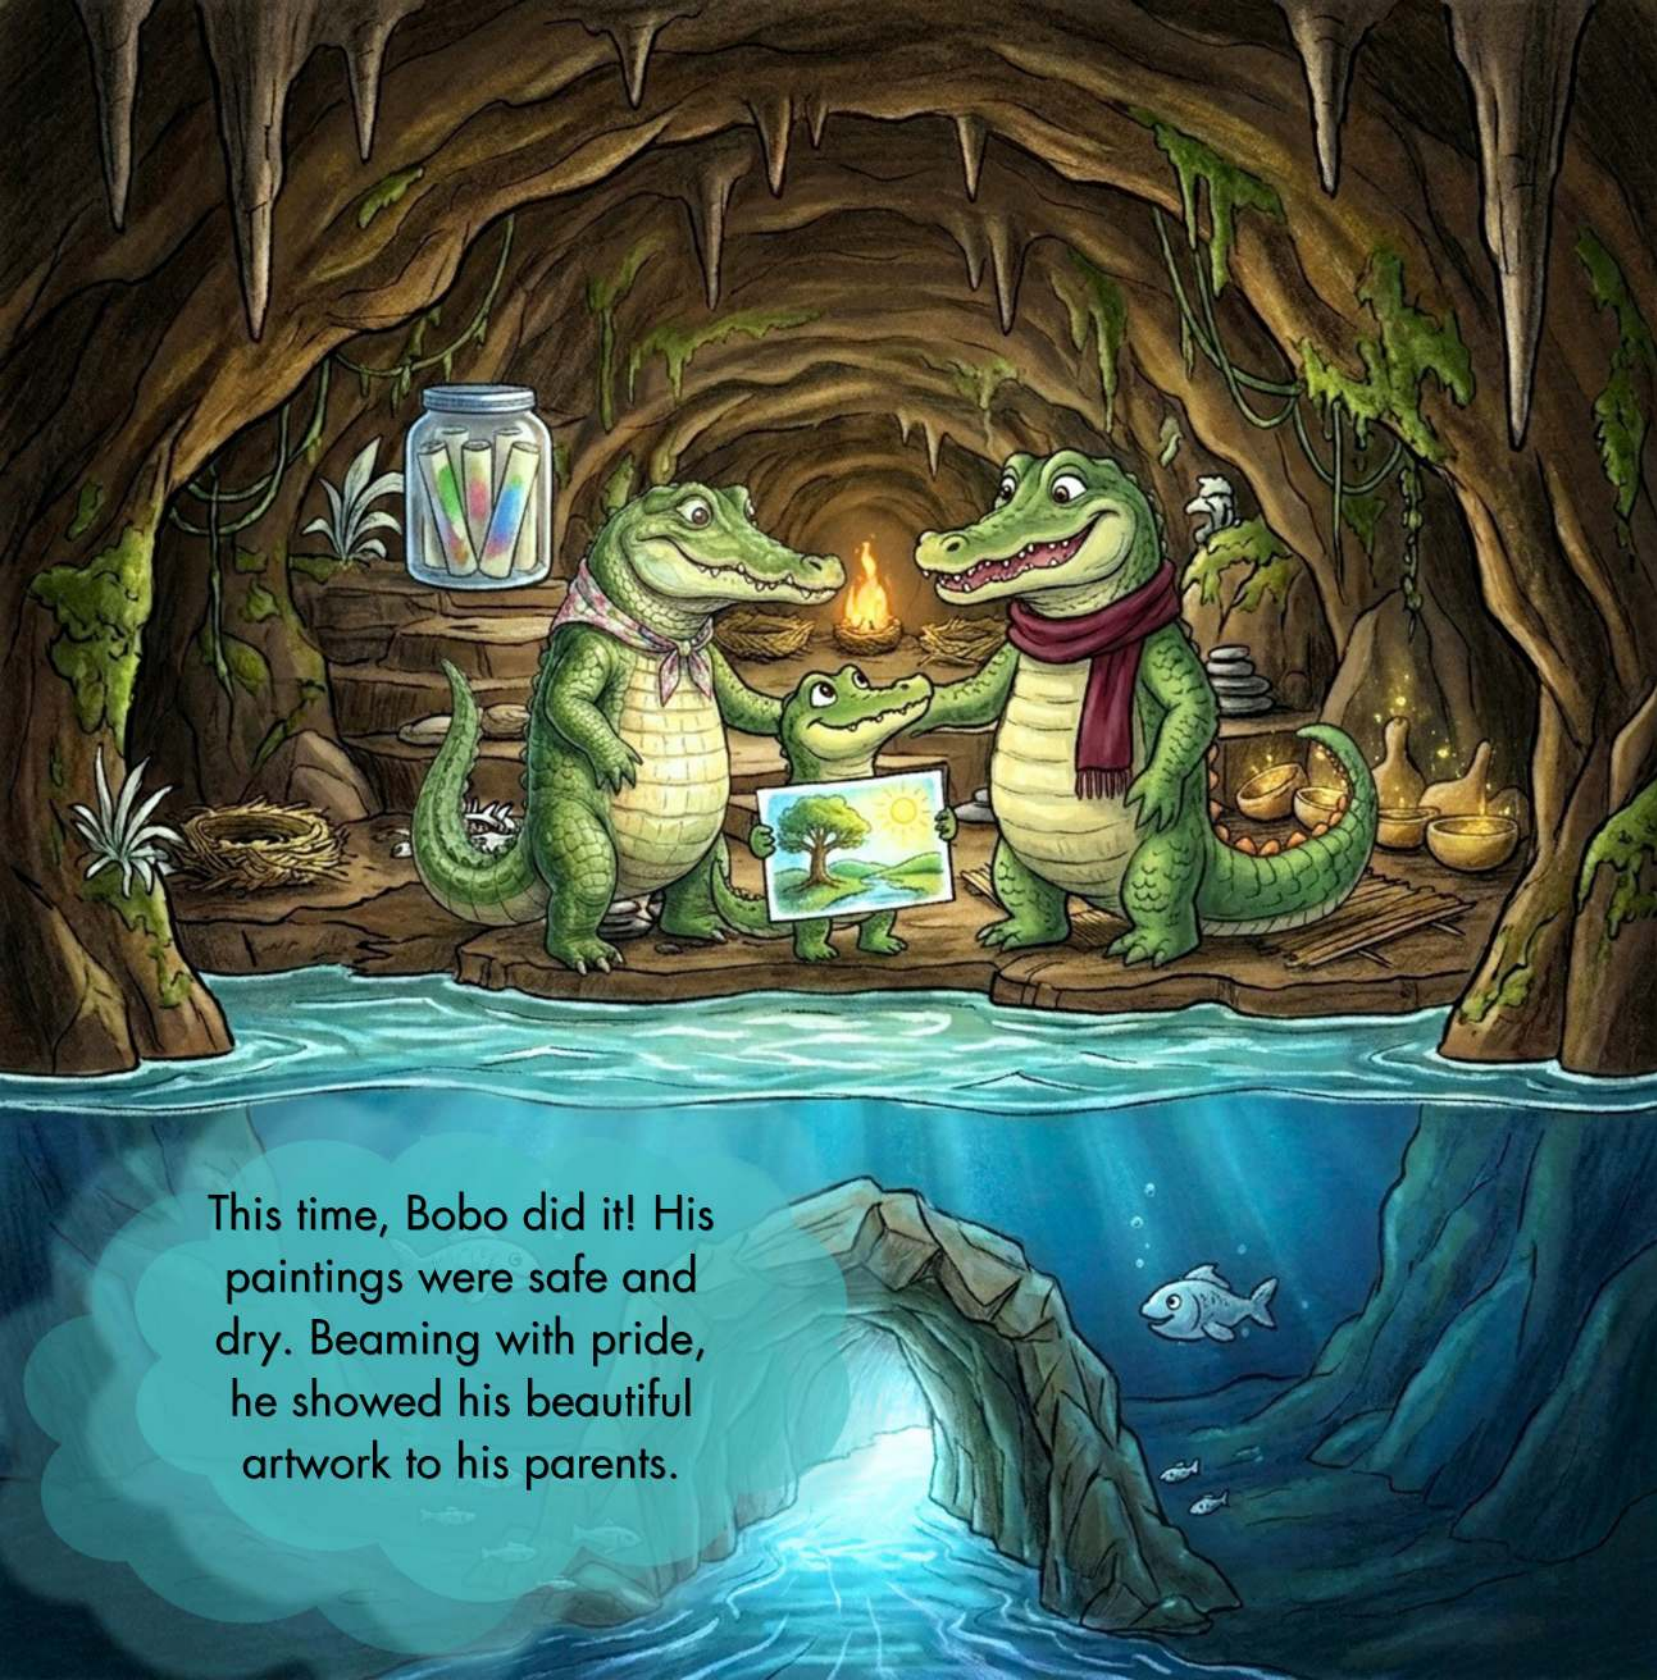

Poor Bobo! His beautiful paintings kept getting ruined. Lying by the riverbank, he sniffled over his soggy artwork. Just then, a curious turtle and a crocodile spotted him.

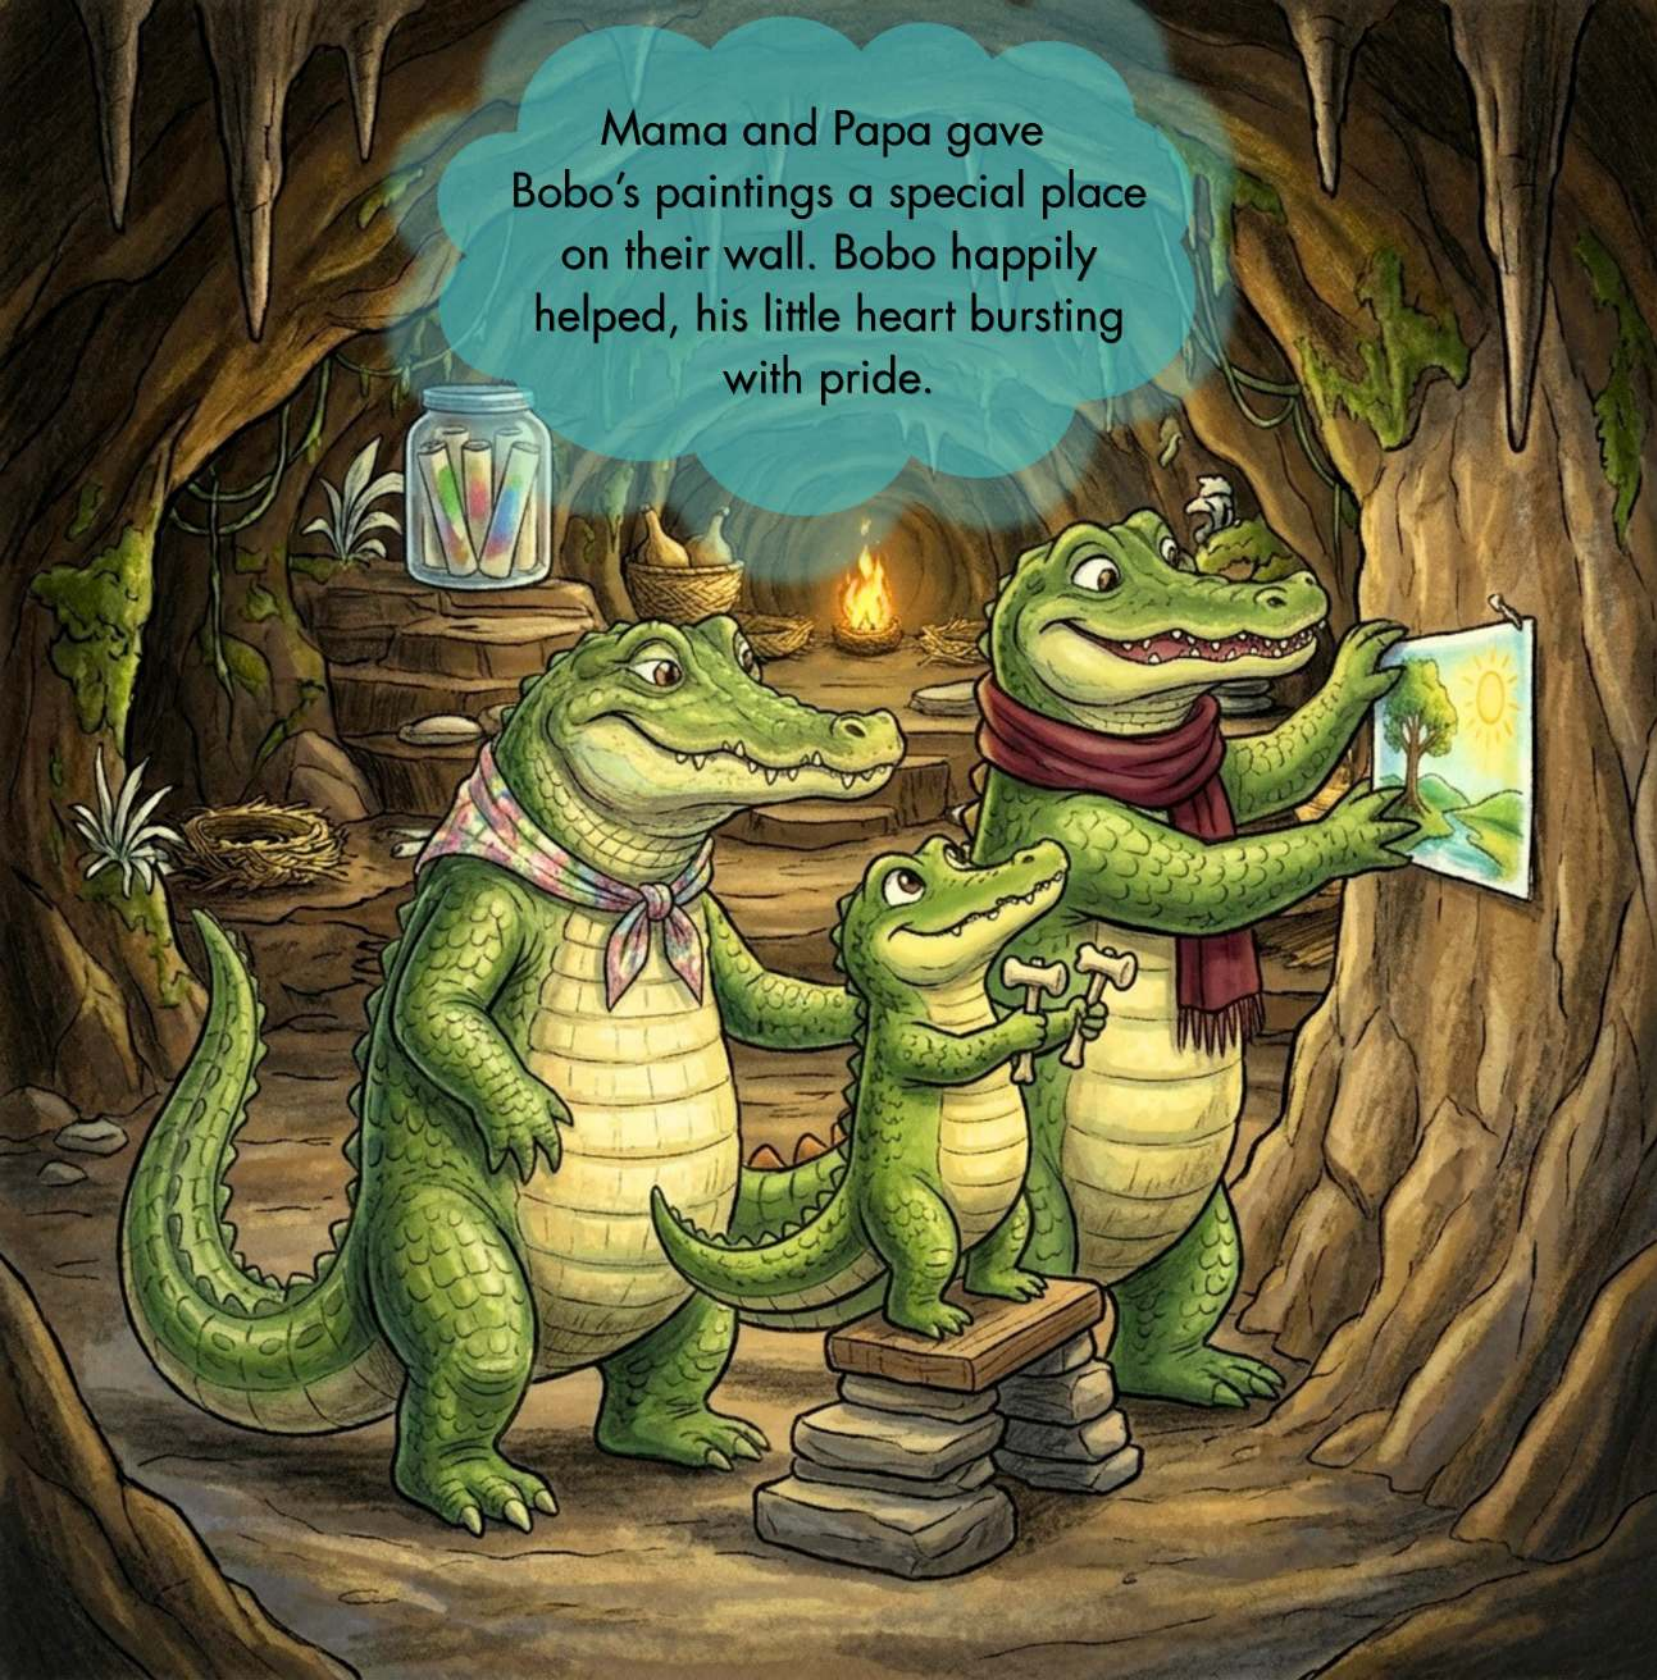

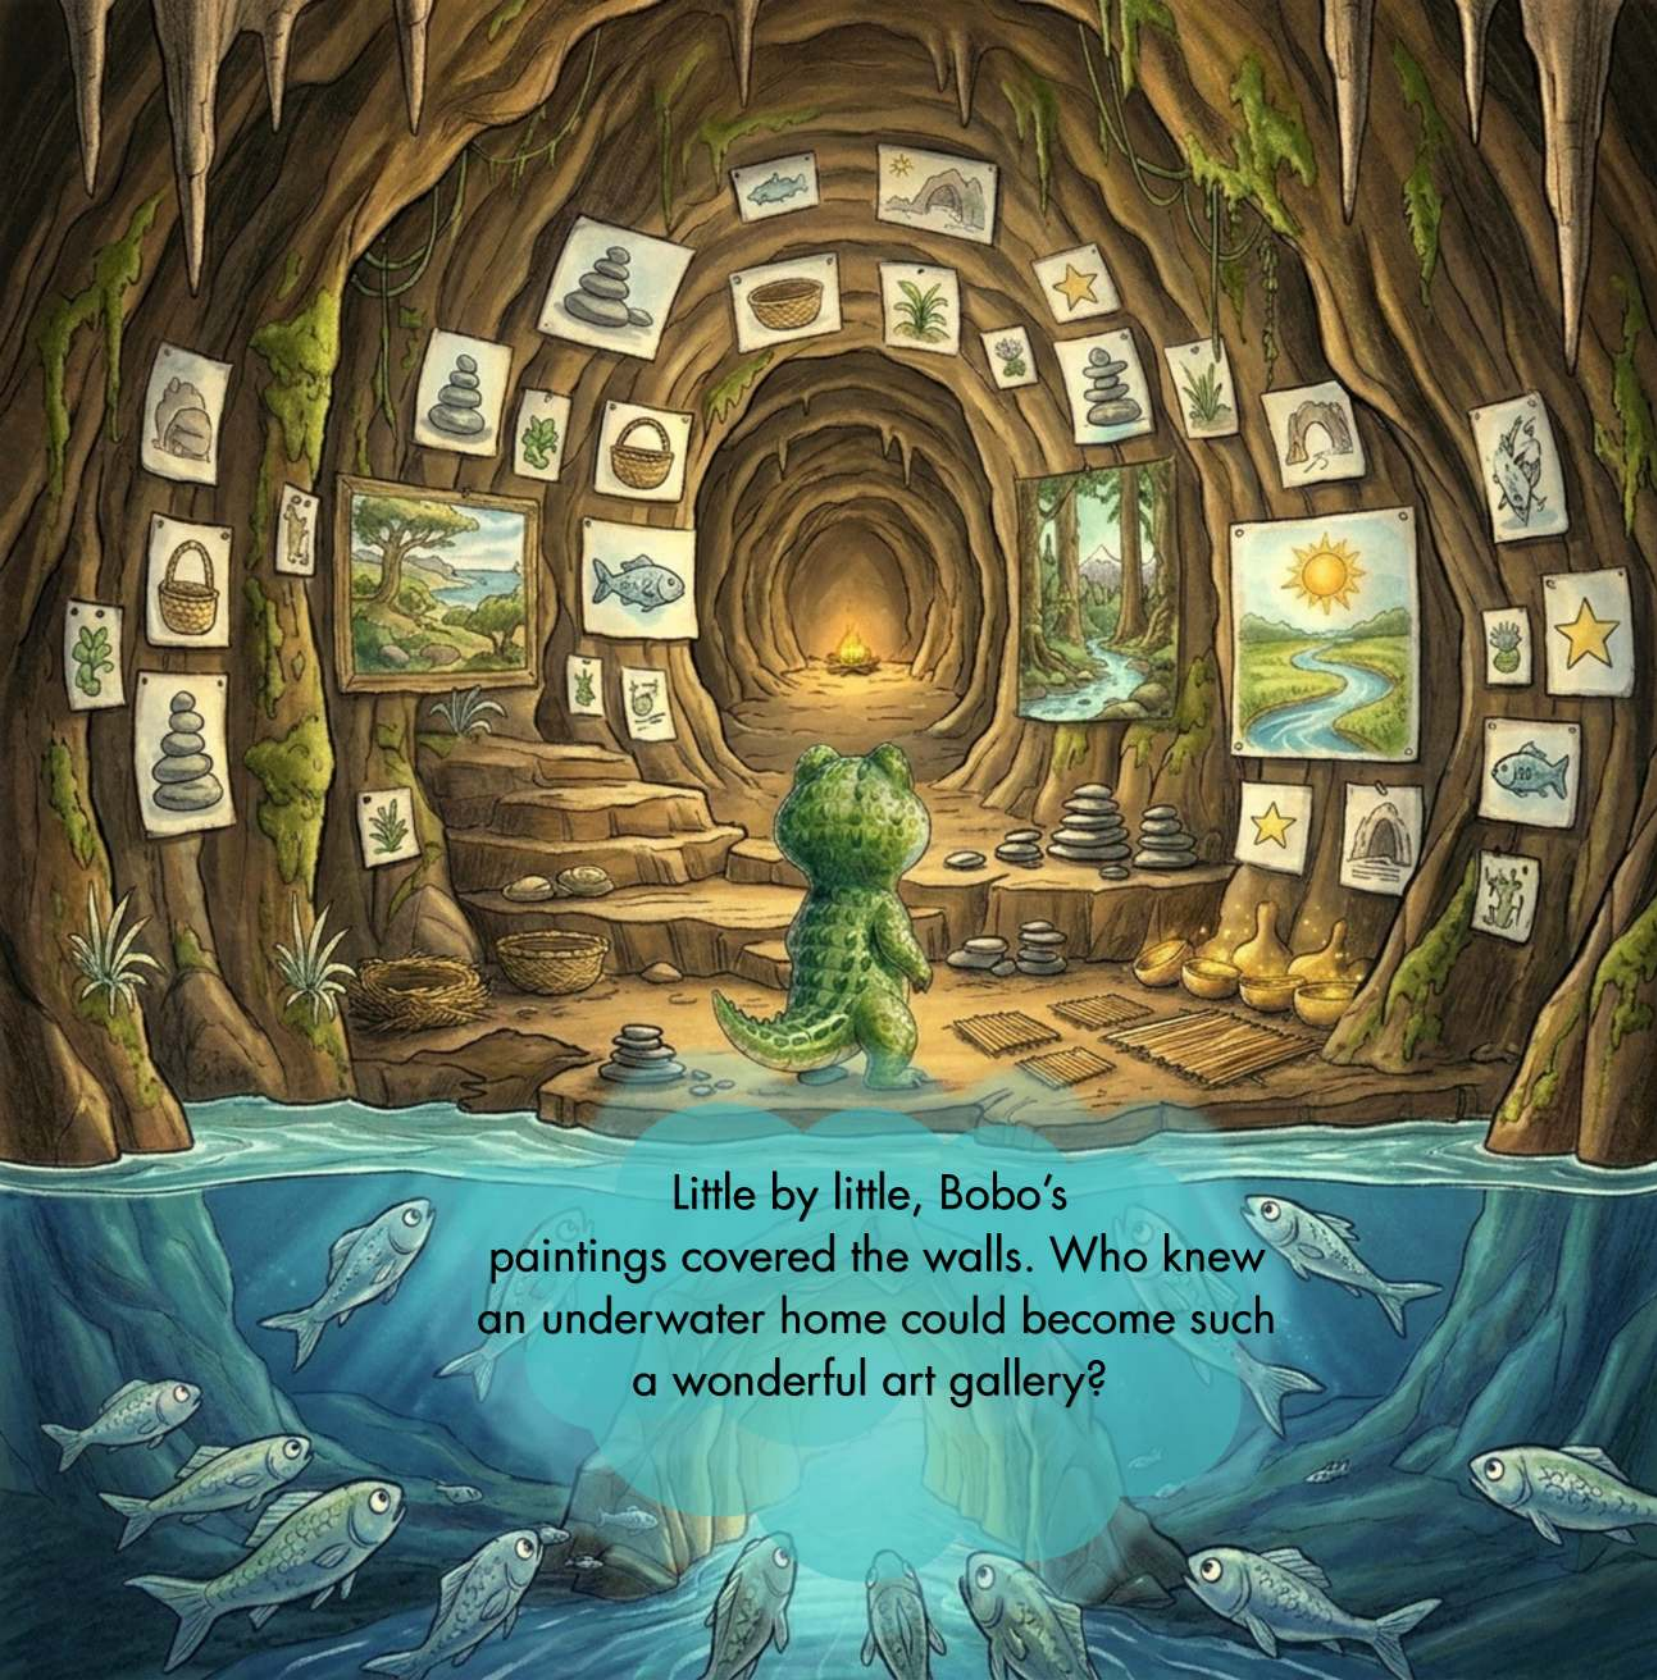

Suddenly, the old turtle had an idea! "Aha!
Let's seal your paintings in an airtight jar to keep them safe and dry all the way to your den!"

This time, Bobo was determined! With his friends' help, he found a jar to carry his paintings safely to his den.

This time, Bobo did it! His paintings were safe and dry. Beaming with pride, he showed his beautiful artwork to his parents.

Mama and Papa gave Bobo's paintings a special place on their wall. Bobo happily helped, his little heart bursting with pride.

Little by little, Bobo's paintings covered the walls. Who knew an underwater home could become such a wonderful art gallery?
